Kaiyula by Muzee of Kanazi

Translated and Edited by P. S.

Kaiyula is a woman's name. It is also the distant thunder that accompanies the first sprinklings of rain after the long, parched, and sometimes hungry dry season.

The ballad of Kaiyula is a poetic evocation of human passion: the supernatural heat that melts together lovers created only for each other; and a lover's crazy, aesthetic, mind-altering embrace of the other's beauty. That is, the ballad is about attraction between youths, on one hand, and between adults, on the other.

Comparing this ballad with The Place You Come From reveals similar episodes based on particular speech interactions: seduction, pillow talk, and post-coital exchange. Kaiyula also has several other kinds of episodes and includes two seductions not one; The Place You Come From gives more emphasis to the post-coital exchange and its consequences. Seeing the episodes as types assists understanding of the many poetic figures and the rhetorical functions they serve.

Muzee sang this ballad on August 22, 1969, to an audience gathered at the traditional house (msonge) of Dionies Lutabanzibwa.

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 1-17:
The ballad begins with twenty-seven lines of poetic images of sensual attraction and the strong feelings associated with particular social relationships (lines 1-16.1), concluded by an authorial aside (line 17), shifting attention to the start of narrative.

NOTES

1-1.3 Hunger… Shyness… Pounding-heart… Keeping-up-appearances are all intense feelings that are produced by or in the kinds of persons mentioned. They introduce a ballad that is about intense feelings, the latter's place in the cosmos, and the kind of action they entail. A child's hunger pains not only the child, but also its caring parents, whose emotion is said to be the referent of this image. A bride's shyness or "shame" is her conventional response to the dramatic transformation in her life produced by change of status and residence at marriage; a bride is an omu-gole and "to be ashamed" is oku-gola (but see also Kitekele:21). The anxiety of warriors and the semi-rich are produced by the social necessity and the possible consequences of public performance. Batende are said to be legendary warriors; the word could also mean "lovers."

1.4-1.8 These lines are often sung together by Muzee (see Kajango: 5.2-5.5, 41-41.4, 167.4-167.7), but it seems to me that they form three separate poetic images (those on 1.4 1.5, and 1.6-1.8). All describe intense feelings. A squash plant's stem, tendrils and foliage cover the ground as sinuously as passion envelops the body (see 336). A host's lack of a place to seat guests creates an anxiousness compounded of elevated social standing and insufficient resources (as in 1.3). And the packet of coffee berries has come to embody longing for an absent lover.

1.9-1.10 I could not till the earth… is the sort of lover's discourse that measures passion against social convention and, by this comparison, indicates the extra-ordinary state that love creates (see The Place You Come From:75-79, 87-98).

2-5 These figurative terms praise and address a woman (and below 62, 188).

6-7 Soothing-warmth… Bubbling-warmth refer to the warm feeling produced by the pelts of these animals.

POETIC STANZAS

1-1.3: Stanza in concatenated types; each line is composed of two nouns, a feeling and a social category characterized by it; syntactically the lines group as aaab: in all but the last line, the relationship between nouns is expressed by the possessive particle /-a/ "of"; in the final line (1.3) the nouns are linked by the conjunction /nka/ "like" or "as"; semantically, the lines associate as aabb according to the social categories - those inside the home, kin (children, brides) versus those outside the home, non-kin (warriors, the semi-rich).

1-54.1: Verse passage composed of three types of linegroups, repeated and elaborated as a unit three times; the component linegroups are: repeated descriptions of lovingly entwined bodies (ENTWINING), passages of praise (PRAISE), and sections of narration or quoted utterance that move the action forward (ACTION; in the first appearance of the triad (21-32) the three parts follow one another linearly: first comes ENTWINING (21-24), internally composed as a couplet (21-21.21-54.1) finalized by a marked word order of direct object + verb, together with a three line stanza (22-24) in aba formed by lines (a's: 22, 24) that have a body part initially and the verb "to be" in mid position contrasted with an intervening line (23) whose (action) verb is in final position, directly preceded by a body part noun; second is PRAISE, in relatively simple couplet form (25-26); finally, ACTION is described from the point of view of an elder woman (28-32) in lines that can be construed as a compound stanza in aab, 2 + 2 + 1: the first couplet (28-29) coheres semantically as discovery/response; the second (30-31) coheres by repetition and parallelism; and the finalizing quoted utterance (32) contrasts with the previous narrative; the second appearance of the triad (ENTWINING, PRAISE, ACTION - 33-42) sees a shortened ENTWINING (33-35) forming a stanza in aba: lines that include verbs (a's: 33, 33.1, 35) are contrasted with one that does not (34); PRAISE and ACTION are themselves entwined, the latter split and encompassing the former in an aba pattern: if they were contiguous, the ACTION lines would form stanza in abab: a's name a social category, girl (36) and boy (41), while b's (37, 42) are both formulated as verb initial + body part; ACTION encapsulates PRAISE (38-40), which forms a stanza in aba formed by contrast between lines that include verbs (38, 40) and one that does not (39); the third appearance of the triad begins with a still shorter ENTWINING (43-44) formed as a stanza in aba' by the contrasting placement of "I found" at the beginning of 43.1; the ACTION is comprised of a judgment regarding what should be done (45-47) structured as aba, verb initial/verb final/verb initial; and the PRAISE is elaborated (48-54.1) into a verse in aba: a's are composed of a repeated formula, question (48, 53), name (49, 54) and praisename (49.1, 54.1); between these stanzas that mirror each other are two linegroups (49.2-51 and 51.1-52.1) the second of which is clearly a stanza in aba formed by familiar lines to which verbs (51.1, 52.1) have markedly been added contrasted with a single intervening line that remains without a verb (52); the three triads that comprise the passage as a whole form an aba pattern; internal cyclical organization of the second triad (33-42) - that is, its encompassing of PRAISE by ACTION (36-42) - is markedly different from the linear organization of the first and last sections, thus creating the aba pattern.

Hunger of children,
Shyness of brides,
Heart-pounding of warriors,
Keeping-up-of-appearances like the moderately-well-to-do

It spreads like the squash plant.

May you lack the space to seat your guests.
A packet by a lover wrapped–
Its coffee berries you eat;
Its wrapper you sit and gaze upon.

To lie with you I would not till the earth.
I'd have already reached the limit.

He said, "Dear one,"
He said, "Little mother,

Heart of our people,
Creator of the body,

Soothing-warmth of a gazelle,
Bubbling-heat of a civet cat,

Njala y' abaana
Nshoni z' abagole
Biteleelo by' abatende
Bwemalamalo nk' omukombi,

Gugendwa nk' olutontozi lw' ekibanga

Kabule emikalize
Katwa akokomeilwe omugenda -
Kamwani okalya;
Kashankala oikala nolebaleba

Kulaala naiwe tinakulima -
Nkagobya lubimbi.

Ahi, "Baaba"
Ahi, "Mawe kaana,

Mwoyo gw' abaitu,
Ishewanga bugingo,

Bugubugu y' akajobe,
Mokomoko y' akamondo,

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 18-26:
In agricultural fields outside a village, women leave two babies lying together as they work nearby (lines 18-20.1). Uncovering the male and female infants, an elder woman finds them in an intimate, adult embrace.

Lines 27-47:
The woman calls the spirits for help and tells the others what she saw.

NOTES

8-11 Skin… refers to the outer layer of the trunk of a banana plant, which varies in color by species.

12-15 Women's pubichair may be cosmetically removed by shaving as noted here, or by plucking as alluded to at the very end of the ballad (400-404). Most pleasing is said to be the condition a few days after shaving, when the short hair is likened to small, even teeth in a welcoming "smile" - omusheko (15). The image of pubic hair occurs at three critical points in the ballad: beginning, end, and the point at which the stranger wins the bride's heart (247.1).PAGE

25 Grasshopper… and Waves… are metaphors for visual and sensual aspects of female genitals (explained in note to Kachwenyanja: 308) 30, 31: Ilimabuye and Nyakalembe are agricultural spirits to whom women make entreaty (see note to Kajango: 199).

POETIC STANZAS

8-11: These lines were actually sung as: Kyai k'enkonjwa/ Munyaanya abailagula/ Mh-mh/ Ky'entundu/ Munyaanya abailagula/ Ky'enkonjwa/ Munyanya abela mubili. Skin of the enkonjwa/ Sister to the dark-complected/ Mh-mh (no)/ Of the entundu/ Sister to the dark-complected/ Of the enkonjwa/ Sister to the light-skinned body. They are apparently a mistake and a hasty correction, so I have altered them here to match their repetition on lines 206-209.

12-16.1: Compound stanza, 2 + 2 + 2, in abb; the first line pair (a: 12-13) describes an initial action/reaction pair: knowing, you didn't tell me/ I'd have known; 2nd person/1st person, respectively, in verbal inflections; in both line pairs that follow (b's: 14-15 and 16-16.1) the action/reaction relationships are the reverse; in these, 1st person/2nd person inflections structure the imagined exchange; the second and third line pairs also cohere in that their first lines begin with the formula, verb + body part, and their second lines conclude with the stem /shek/ "laugh" (inflected as noun and verb, respectively).

Skin of the enkonjwa plant,
Sister of the light-skinned body.
Skin of the entundu plant, child,
Sister of the dark-complexioned.

When you knew you'd come,
You didn't send word so I'd know.
I'd have shaved my pubic hair–
And you'd have found me with the giggles.
I'd have brushed my teeth white.
I'd have spoken–then you'd see the very things to laugh with.

But now these things are far away."

The women were four
In a dry-season just as now,
Breaking clods of earth up in a fallow field.
They had two infants
And they lay them down together.

Uncovering the little ones,
They found the infants in an embrace.
One tongue was on the other.
Below, the navels danced.
Legs were intertwined.

Little-boy entered Grasshopper,
Waves inside it like a lake.

Yo-o-o my friend,

It was an elder that uncovered them.
She wailed.
She invoked Ilimamabuye.
She invoked Nyakalembe.
"Mother, what is it?"
"What I just saw–

I found the infants in an embrace.
One tongue was on the other,
Their navels danced.

The little girl
Threw out her palm.
She rested it above the manchild's hip,

Kyai ky' enkonjwa,
Munyaanya abela omubili.
Kyai ky' entundu bojo,
Munyaanya abalikwilagula.

Olwo wamayile olija,
Tontuma nkamanya.
Nkamwa ebyoya bojo,
Okashanga nyin' omusheko.
Nkasinga amaino gakela,
Nkagamba nobona eky' okushekya.

Ebyo bili halai bwoli."

Abakazi bali bana
Omu kyanda nka mambweenu
Mbatela amasinde omu ihyamba.
Bain' enkelemeke ibili
Bainyamika hamoi.

Kugya kushulula abaana
Enkelemeke bashanga ifumbataine.
Olulimi luli omu lundi.
Aha ifo emikundi yataiga.
Amagulu gali eishobe.

Nyalojo yatain' Ekimoma,
Kina amayengo nk' enyanja.

Yo-o-o Baaba

Ayabashulwile omukaikulu.
Yatamu endulu.
Yatakila Ilimamabuye,
Yatakila Nyakalembe.
"Mawe wabaki?"
"Ekyonabona mbwenu

Nashanga enkelemeke ifumbataine.
Olulimi omu lundi,
Emikundi yataiga.

Akaana kaisiki
Kajugunya oluhi.
Kata omushaija aha kiiga,

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 48-54.1:
The eponymous girl and the boy are identified by name and praise epithets.

Lines 55-72.2:
They grow to marriageable age and one day, as they are returning home from their tasks outside the village, they meet (lines 55-62). The young man immediately launches into a poetic seduction and a proposal to elope. [She agrees]

NOTES

39 Pathway of Soft-steps is an area of the back near the kidneys. It is the target of tickling jokes between adults of the opposite sex and is said to convey its pleasurable sensations quickly and inwardly (40).

45-47 I cannot understand…let them be…born in love. With this interpretation of events the elder avoids the implication that the children's behavior violates natural law. Had they done so, they would have committed an eihano (pl. amahano), a dreaded disturbance in equilibrium that requires redressive action (like the murder in "She's Killed One…" or the unnatural birth in "I Shall Be Drinking From Them" or the incest in "Child of the Valley" in See so…). The unnamed concept surfaces, however, to name the extramarital love that seems a consequence of this early attraction (173, 212, 394). Its semantic element of magical wonder is separated from the element of unnatural calamity on 340.1, where the word evokes sexual attraction. Conversely, the word has only negative, but not unnatural, connotations in Kachwenyanja: 136, 171.

49 Kaiyula is a woman's name (cf. Ngimbwa's wife in Kaitaba: 110) but the poetic associations of its praise lead in several directions. This is generally true of praise: distinct virtues of similarly named entities intermingle in poetic allusions. As a plant (49.2) ka-iyula can be used to treat headache (Kitekele: 13, 99; there it is called ny-iyula, its prefix changed from the diminutive ka-). But Kaiyula is also a spirit of thunder (Mugasha: 43) and is associated with kito, the second phase of the small dry season (akanda), which precedes the heavy March rains. Thus, she is praised as Little one (Kito) and invited to drop down from above (63, 188.9-188.10).

On the pathway of soft steps,
Where love steps gently to the heart.
And then the manchild
Placed his little fist on her.

Legs lay intertwined.
  I found the navels danced.
One tongue was on the other.

I say plainly what I cannot understand.
Let the children be–
They were born loving one another."

"Who is the girl?"
"The girl is Kaihyula
  Hunger of children."

  Kaiyula herbs are many:
There's the one that climbs on other plants.
I call it Fattened cow sitting in a favored spot.

  Hunger, you cause pain to children.
Shyness of Brides.
  Pounding-heart, you make the warriors doubt.

"Who is the manchild?"
"Knife-bearer
  Good-fortune to the traders."
He developed well
And the girl developed well.

One day, when she was gathering straw -
–The sun had descended in the late afternoon–

The boy was returning from corralling the cattle.
She had tied her bundles of straw.
The boy was returning from corralling the cattle.
They met.

Omu mala ga bunyoga,
Kali ngonzi inyog' omwoyo.
Kandi omushaija
Yamutekaho akatome.

Amagulu galaala eishobe.
  Nashanga emikundi yona yataiga.
Olulimi luli omu lundi.

Nayatula ekyontalikumanya.
Abaana obaleke -
Bazaalwa bagonjainyie."

"Omwisiki n' owai?"
"Omwisiki ni Kaihyula
  Njala y' abaana."

  Obwihyula buba bungi:
Aliho akatemba ebigote.
Ninyeta Muloolwa shamaitu y' abaikalage.

  Njala oluma abato.
Nshoni z' abagole
  Biteleelo ohangaala n' abatende.

"Omushaija n' owai?"
"Gilengala
  Gahila-abatunzi."
Yakulakwo
N' omwisiki yakulakwo.

Kayabaile naihya obunyaasi,
Eizoba eli elya bwaigolo.

Omwojo naluga kutahya,
Ogu yakomile ekiba ky' obunyaasi,
Omwojo naluga kutahya,
Lyabuganganwa.

POETIC STANZAS

57-62: Compound stanza, 2 + 2 + 1, in aab: two couplets (a's: 57-59 and 60-61) are composed as woman's action/ man's action (line 58, which notes the time of day, seems interpolated); in the single line that finalizes the figure (b: 62) they meet.

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 73-97:
After ten months or so of marriage, while making love, the young man remarks upon the absence of beads around Kaiyula's waist.

NOTES

62.7 Iron points refers to the slim, conical ferrule at the tip of a spearshaft. It is used to plant the spear in the ground with its head up, as a matchmaker does outside the door of a prospective bride's family.

62.8 I do not understand the significance of this image. Leatherkilts are no longer worn. The dictionary says they were solely the garb of women, (IN:134; see Kitekele: 511) but the destitute clansman wears one in Lukiza(: 95), possibly with metaphoric meaning.

63 Kito, see note to 49.

64-65.2 I'd kill you and eat you...the-Spotted-One are two images of the lover's will-to-possess. The first (64-64.3) incorporates the loved object as food, as the seducer did in The Place You Come From(: 54-56). Here the desired consummation is inserted in a discourse of adornment and display - the beautiful eyes worn as beads, the bold refusal to honor the bond of cattle ownership that ultimately supports the state. In The Place You Come From the possession is enfolded in a discourse of familiarity. Familiarity and adornment reappear in their respective plots as motivating themes. In the second image (65-65.2), the lover would possess the loved object as a prize, an achievement to be marked publicly and poetically. (On the poetic resonances of the Spotted-one - here, the Leopard - see the note to Lukiza: 171.2) A groom's traditional recitation of self-praise, done on the day after his bride changes residence to consummate their marriage, is a social referent of the image; but uncultured men are also said to brag of their conquests, and this undertone is probably present as well.

POETIC STANZAS

62.2-63.1: Series of 5 couplets formed by parallelism.

62.8-62.9: Praise not understood.

64-64.4: Five line figure, 3 + 2, beginning and ending with a double verb pattern; the second and third lines begin with body parts, creating a 3-line abb figure in 64-64.2.

He said, "Little mother
Heart of our people,
Creator of the body,

Where dwells the soothing-warmth of a bushbuck pelt
The bubbling-heat of a civet cat.

Mosquitoes prick me like thorns,
Breasts prick me like iron points.

It falls on its back.
A leather skirt works.

I'm-not-dropped-down-upon, you are Kito
Alight on me you are Kaihyula.

I'd kill you and eat you.
Your eyes I would wear.
Your blood would flavor the milk.
And even if the owner wanted some
I'd refuse him.

Lying with you, my poetry of self-praise
Would outshine the killer of the Spotted-one.

Weye!
My wife, Comforter
Weye!
Weye!
Oho-o-o

He said, "I'd kill you and eat you.
Your eyes I would wear."
The girl said yes.

He said, "Let's elope and marry.
Courting can take too long."
I eloped with her and truly married her.

I secluded her for four [and four], eight months.
In the ninth, I took her out.
In the tenth, she went out to the grassland to gather straw.

71-71.2: Stanza in aab formed by contrast between quoted utterances in the subjunctive (a's: 71, 71.1) and narration in the indicative (b: 71.2).

72-72.2: Stanza in aba' formed by repetition.

Ahi, "Mawe kaana,
Mwoyo gw' abaitu,
Ishewanga bugingo,

Butula bugubugu bw' akajobe,
Mokomoko y' akabundu.

Nsili zinkoza nk' amahwa,
Mabele gankoza nk' emihunda.

Lugwa bugazi.
Nkanda ikola.

Tindigw' oli Kito.
Hanantuk oli Kaihyula.

Nkwite nkulye.
Amaisho ngajwale.
Eshagama yawe elunge ebililo.
Alitwaala agyenze,
Ngye ngimwime.

Kulaala naiwe kyonka ebyebugo
Ninshaaga Aisile-lugondo.

Weye!
Mukazi wange, Kahuumuliza.
Weye!
Weye!
Oho-o-o

Ahi, "Nkwite nkulye.
Amaisho ngajwale."
Omwisiki yaikiliza.

Ahi, "Nkuleye nkushwele.
Okushelela lyakuba ila."
Namuleya namushwelakwo.

Nkamwalika amezi ganai munaana
Okwa mwenda mwaalwile.
Okwa ikumi ali omu bunyaasi. Agenzile omu kwiya.

73-74.1: Stanza in aab formed by number sequence finalized by a non-numbered phrase.

Her sister-in-law was with her.

My friend, my friend,
When she returned from the grasslands,
In darkness just as now–

When evil walks about
When a person faints and does not revive,
When one lover
Meets another,
When you hear them in the royal mansion finally disperse.
When love blooms
And speaks with only two teeth.

Wewe!

I obliged and took hold.
I brought it there and we embraced.
Then love's bargain-striker:
I placed my hand above her hip.

I feel inside.
She's touched a tender spot.
She says, "My friend, blood brother of mine."
I say, "My elder . . .

When I let her go and she moved away a bit,
I said "Mother, you're the best but
When I eloped with you,
I took you from the fields.
I did not take you from your father's lap.

Around your waist,
You have no beads–
Drinking-straw beads,
Those Mothers-of-stripes.
Or to name a second kind: Straighten-your-legs,
I honor you, Adorners of the waist."

Aina omulamukazi.

Baaba, baaba,
Kayalugile omu bunyaasi
Omu kilo nka mambweenu -

Mbali ekibi kigendela
Mbali omuntu akabila atahimbuuke,
Mbali omulungi
Abuganganilwa n' ondijo,
Mbali ohulila bagwihya omu kikale,

Mbali engonzi ishakilana,
Ikagamba n' amaino gabili.

Wewe!

Nakunda nakwata
Nalwegobya twafumbatana.
Ekichwa-iguzi ky' engonzi:
Namuta akahi aha kiige

Ngya mpulila wenene omu lubunda
Yantoneka aka.
Ahi, "Baaba munywanyi wange
Nti, "Mukulu wa...

Kanamutaishwile na wenene akeshumba,
"Mawe nosinga.
Nkakuleya.
Nkakwihya omu lweya.
Tinakwihile aha bilelo.

Omu nda yawe omu,
Toinamu nkwanzi mu nda.
Nkwanzi ya musheke
Nikyo kiina Kanyina-obuyenje.
Kugya kubaza enkwanzi eya kabili: lambikiliza,
Y' ekikonchol' omu nda, Bojo nkuboneke."

NOTES

78-81.1 The bard uses parts of this passage in other ballads (Kachwenyanja: 17.1-19.2 and Kajango: 52-52.1). Together, the passages show how he artfully recontextualizes the sequence. Here Muzee adds a metaphoric image to the four metonymic images of night that appear in Kachwenyanja. There, the passage was completed by an image of a plural subject acting at a particular place (courtiers dispersing from the palace) following a series of placeless single subjects (witch roaming, sick person fainting, lover meeting another). Here, the bard refinalizes the passage by adding an image with an abstract subject (love) that blossoms as two points (teeth) moving rhythmically together and apart (in a talking mouth). Note how the bard's phrasing can violate syntactic unity (79.1-80).

84 The bargain-striker is an amount offered in barter that seals the deal, that brings the discussion of terms to a successful conclusion in preparation for the actual exchange of goods.PAGE

91 A groom first receives his bride from a father's lap in a ceremony called kubukala (to hold on the lap, as one does to assist a woman in childbirth). This occurs as one of the many stages in a complete family wedding, which these characters circumvented by eloping. A bride would have been presented with waist beads just prior to the ceremony.

96 Straighten-your-legs are beads named for a pleasurable stretching movement associated with lovemaking.

POETIC STANZAS

78-81.1: Stanza in aaaab formed semantically by a series of metonymic nighttime images (78-80.1) finalized by an extended metaphor (81-81.1).

83-86.1: Two stanzas in aabb; each begins with a double verb (83, 85); the four couplets that comprise the stanzas cohere variously, but of them the most marked form - repetition of initial locutives (86-86.1) - finalizes the passage as a whole.

87-93: Verse in aab, 3 + 3 + 2, two 3-line stanzas finalized by a couplet; the two stanzas (87-88 and 89-91) are both structured as aab the first through contrast between two narrative lines and a single quoted utterance, the second through contrast between two initial verbs in the distant past and a single, initial, negative, past perfect; the couplet (92-93) coheres by repetition and enjambment.

94-97: Stanza in abab formed semantically as bead names alternate with praise.

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 98-110.4:
The young woman begins to cry, the man to apologize, and finally, he promises to go on a journey of trade to bring her some waist beads (lines 98-102.1). She accompanies him to Lake Victoria and sees him off on his journey.

NOTES

101 A drum is a complex symbol, described in the note to The Place You Come From:124. This statememt transforms a familiar way of swearing, from "...I'd lie with my own mother" to "...I'd lie with you." See Mugasha: 81.3-81.5, 86-86.2.

101.1 I'd lie with you is a statement that fulfills the form but not the content of punishment.

105 Great White is the Haya name for Victoria, and Bull refers to the god Mugasha.

106 To put the paddle on my hip is to propel the canoe. 115, 116: Kishwa, or Kishwagala, is the name of an epic bard from Ihangilo. His repertoire overlaps with Muzee's, and I have several performance texts of his in my collection.

POETIC STANZAS

98-102.1: Compound stanza in aaab, 2 + 2 + 2 + 2, formed by multiple couplets that cohere by virtue of semantic relationships (a's: general/specific (98-98.1), imperative/justification (99-100), crime/punishment (101-101.1)) contrasted with and a single, finalizing couplet that coheres by enjambment and the syntactic relationship between adverbial modification (102) and principal action (102.1); additionally, semantic contrasts between the three initial couplets and the final one - present/future and action/result - contribute to the aab pattern.

103-105: Stanza in aab formed by contrast between two lines (103, 104) that have initial, similarly inflected verbs and a single line (105) that has no verb.

You know the tears of women.
She began to cry.
I said, "Mother, be comforted.
I meant no abuse.
For my abusing of a royal drum,
The penalty I'll pay: I'll lie with you.

Let the sun rise, my wife,
And I'll set out to bring you things in trade."

When it rose, she filled a fat provision pack.
She brought me to the mighty lake,
Victoria of the Bull.
Don't let me put the paddle on my hip!

When she saw me disappear on the horizon,
She took a torch.
She held it burning over the water.
"Lake, cause no harm!
Flame, which I hold burning here, be ever awake!

My man has traveled in trade
To find fine beads for me, the Mothers-of-Stripes.
–For he married me still young–
I'll put them around my middle so
He'll always find something to spread beneath his hand."

Amalila g' abakazi nogamanya.
Yabanza kulila.
Nti, "Mawe huumula.
Naba ntakujumile.
Ekijumi 'kyonakujuma ngoma,
Ninkalaale na iwe.

Kabukye mukazi wange,
Natuluka kugya kutunda."

Kabwakeile, yankomela olutala lwakekela.
Yangobya enyanja empango,
Lwelu lwa Ngundu.
Tante ngai omu itundu!

Kayabona nahwelelela obuziba,
Yakwata omulilo
Yaguhemba aha maizi.
"Nyanja otakuhya!
Mulilo 'gwonahembao otakulaala!

Owange yagya kutunda
Kumpigila enkwanzi ya Kanyina-obuyenje.
Anshweile muto
Mbut' omu lulbunda lwange
Abone eky' okwanjala."

107-110.4: Two stanzas (107-109.1 and 110-110.4); couplets in the first stanza cohere, respectively, by similarly inflected initial verbs (107-108) and by a repeated syntactic formula of initial nouns of apostrophe + negative imperatives (109-109.1); the structure of the first stanza concatenates the aabb pattern formed by coherent couplets with a pattern of abba formed by repetitions and replacements of "water"("lake") and "fire"; the second stanza is composed of two couplets (110-110.1 and 110.3-110.4) separated by a single line (110.2); the first couplet coheres by syntactic chaining of infinitives, while the second couplet coheres by virtue of initial verbs in the subjunctive; the 2 + 1 + 2 structure of the second stanza is ambiguously construed as aabb with an interpolated line or as a compound stanza in aba.

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 111-35.1:
The bard chants his own self-praise (lines 111-127) and then returns to the frame of the story.

Lines 135.2-146:
On her way back to the house, Kaiyula meets a neighbor, who asks about her situation and is very complimentary about her appearance; Kaiyula rejects the approach.

POETIC STANZAS

134-135.1: Stanza in abab formed by lexical contrast between yagya, "he went" and yagenda, "he travelled"

Singer's Self-Praise

Weye! eiyeye-e-e Comforter
Wo-o-o Weye! My friend, My friend,
My friend, My friend, Spotted-One
Wewe, Headman in-charge, listen!

You speak the words of Kishwa
Before he recognized him.
You speak the words of Kishwagala
Before he recognized you.

As you are a Musingo of Mulima and Mwenge
Kachuma and Bijuka Bujukuza Lwantungilwe
Of Kamakumbi and Mushoe

I add the ones who gave you birth:
Child of Bayozi women
Comforter
Yo-o-o
Akashozi village of Maziba
Yo-o-o
A child of Balaganwa
I add the ones who gave you birth:
A child of Bayozi women

Lyabutenga village and Kabafu
I finish with my wife:
You are of the bilebe plants of Ntabo and Kyamugasha.

Self-Praise Ends

Aya!
Wewe wewe wewe wewe
Ahi ya ya ya
Ahi ya ya ya ya ya
Ahi ya ya ya ya ya ya
Ahi ya ya ya ya ya ya ya ya ya

He set out and traveled in trade.
He journeyed to Shembenda.
He traveled to Shembenda.
He journeyed to Ilimamashema.

Self-Praise

Weye! eiyeye-e-e Kahuumuliza
Wo-o-o Weye! Baaba baaba,
Baaba baaba Kabamba
Wewe Inchaaji ya bikosi, hulila!

Wagamba bya Kishwa
Atakamwekomize.
Wagamba bya Kishwagala
Atakakwekomize.

Olw' oli w' Omusingo wa Mulima na Mwenge
Kachuma na Bijuka Bujukuza Lwantungilwe
Wa Kamakumbi na Mushoe

Nakutaho abakuzaala:
Omwaana w' Abayozikazi
Kahuumuliza
Yo-o-o
Akashozi ka Maziba
Yo-o-o
Omwaana wa Balagaanwa
Nakutaho abakuzaala:
Omwaana w' Abayozikazi

Lyabutenga na Kabafu
Kumanya mukazi wange namazile:
Oli w' ebilebe bya Ntabo, bojo, na Kyamugasha.

Self-Praise Poetry

Aya!
Wewe wewe wewe wewe
Ahi ya ya ya
Ahi ya ya ya ya ya
Ahi ya ya ya ya ya ya
Ahi ya ya ya ya ya ya ya ya ya

Yatuluka yagya kutunda.
Yagenda Shembenda.
Yagya Shembenda.
Yagenda Ilimamashema.

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 147-160:
When she returns home, she sees the neighbor ask the children of her household to send her an amorous message.

NOTES

135.2-135.3 These two lines begin the elaborate principal Call of the ballad. They both contain strong narrative markers - adverbials and past perfect verbs. But with great drive, the bard rushes into them from the previous episode without a pause.

140 A shaven ring was the hairstyle of young women (see Kachwenyanja: 233-235). Its full name means "foretells illness," but I am not sure what this signifies.

145 The Haya word translated as gentle style is (o)bu-ntu, which has the same nominal root as omu-ntu "person" but the abstract prefix obu-. The word is cognate with utu in Kiswahili. "Personness" or "humanity" are other ways of translating the term.

155 The role of children in conveying a call evokes the ethical universe of a patrilineal clan, as it does in many versions of Lukiza.

POETIC STANZAS

139-141.1: Stanza in concatenataed forms: aabb by virtue of couplets (139-140, 141-141.1) that cohere by parallelism and enjambment, respectively; and abba by contrast between lines in which a body part comes last (139, 141.1) and those in which it comes first (140, 141).

142-143: Stanza in aba' formed by conversational turns and an initial locutive.

144-146: Stanza in aab(b); two parallel lines of quoted utterance (a's: 144-145) are finalized by a third that adds a verb ("I repeat")to the verb reiterated ("I desire"), thus creating a double verb pattern (b: 145.1); the figure is re-finalized with another marked contrast - a narrative line with a negative verb, embodying a shift in point of view.

As I was returning home,
Now that my husband had gone,
I said, "My husband, my dear one, you-u."
When I reached home,
I met our neighbor.
He said, "Where are you coming from, Bride?

There are beads around your ankles.
On your head's a shaven ring.
Around your wrists, more beads, my kings,
Enjoy a conversation with the ones around your ankles."

"I come from seeing off my husband."
He said, "Where did he go?"
"My husband set out today in trade."

"I love your style.
I love your arms,
I also love the way you walk."
I didn't answer him.

When I reached home
–I lived there with my mother-in-law
And there were children, too,
Young girls–
They were corralling cattle
And they were bringing goats.

I looked out on the house lane
And saw the man approach the little ones.

"You children,
Run, tell your mother,
Say, 'The man we met
Says he desires you, child.
He loves your arms.
He loves the way you walk.'"

Kanabaile ninyihululula,
Aho mushaija wange yagenzile,
Ahi, "Baaba, ibaba, baaba, baaba, iwe-e."
Kayabaile yaihululula
Ngya mbuganganwa omwatani waitu
Ahi, "Noluga nkahai mugole?

Enkwanzi ili aha magulu,
Omutwe kishul' endwaala.
Ez' emikono, bakama bange,
Nka zafumola n' amagulu."

"Ninduga kushendekeleza omushaija."
Ati, "Yagy' ahai?"
"Omushaija wange kil' eki yagenda kutunda."

"Nakwenda buntu.
Nakwenda emikono
Nashuba nakwenda n' entambukilo."
Tinamuholoile.

Omwaitu kanabaile nagoba -
Nkaba nyinamu mazaala,
Alimu abaana bato,
Otwisiki tuto.
Twataya ente.
Twaija n' embuzi.

Kuleba omu ilembo,
Omushaija yabugobile.

"Inywe bato -
Mwiluke mugambile nyoko,
Oti, 'Omushaija owo wabuganganwa -
Ngu yakwenda bojo.
Yakwitanil' emikono.
Yakwitanil' entambukilo.'"

155-160: Three couplets that cohere by enjambment (155-156); by initial locutives (157-158); and as parallel lines with repeated initial verbs (159-160); note that the finalizing couplet has the most marked coherence.

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 161-183:
Captivated by the man's words, the children neglect their tasks; Kaiyula criticizes them and a dialogue ensues in which the children express their belief that the man is a former lover of Kaiyula's; she orders them inside.

Lines 184-200.1:
The neighbor approaches the house and begins his verbal seduction with sensual imagery, praise, and declarations of his loving desire, but Kaiyula rejects him.

NOTES

161-162 Calfs and goats... head for cropland because the preoccupied children are not concentrating on their usual domestic tasks.

169-173 Child... you've brought a curse is an interchange that connotes danger (eihano). Children take on an adult role. They address a fully grown woman as "Child" (a familiar term of address derived from the word for "grandchild"), while she politely addresses them as adults, calling them "Mother." They believe the man they announce is a former lover "lost" by marriage but now returned - like the lover in The Place You Come From.

178.2 Words in epic verse - literally, "words or matters in the enanga (tradition) - are paradoxically without real substance. They do not come from the heart of a speaker, as these words of love do.

POETIC STANZAS

163-166: Stanza in two couplets; the first (163-164) coheres by incremental repetition; it is joined to the second couplet (165-166) by syntactic linking (verb final to verb initial); the second couplet coheres internally by similarly inflected initial verbs; the quatrain is finalized by a double verb pattern.

167-177: Verse in aba; previous lines are initially repeated (167-168) and then augmented to form a linegroup (167-171) that is itself essentially repeated, forming a mirror stanza (174-177); the mirrored stanzas are separated by a couplet comprised of exclamations (172-173), forming the aba' pattern.

I see the calves
And the goats pull out their stakes and head for the crops.

Those children!
The little ones mature.
They shake their buttocks.
And to add to that, they spread their thighs.
"You're shaking your breasts, little ones,
And spreading your thighs."

(Children, to the bride:)"Child,
We announce the arrival of what was lost."
(Bride:)"What is it that was lost, mother?
What you have said!
You've created a monstrosity!

You shake your breasts
  And to add to that, you spread your thighs."
"Mother, in the house lane,
I announce the arrival of what was lost."
"What is it that was lost?

  "There is a darkskinned man.
He says he loves you, dear one,
  And these are not just words that come from beer,
  Nor are they merely words in epic versw.
He loves your arms,
  And to add to that, he loves the way you walk.
Open and see him."
She replied, "Children! Come inside and bring the goats."

When they had entered with her cows and goats,
She closed the door.

I approached the house
–She'd closed the door–
I went and stood by the doorway.
I went and stood by the doorway.

Mbona enyana
N' embuzi zakuka n' ebibanga.

Abana abo!
Bato bakulamu:
Bachunda amabunu,
Bashuba bagabula amabelo.
"Nkamwachunda amabele, bato, Mukagabula amabelo."

Bojo,
Nitushula ekilabuzile."
"Ekilabuzile kiki mawe?
Ekyowagamba!
Mwazaala eihano!

Mwachunda amabele
  Mwashuba mwagabula amabelo."
"Mawe omu ilembo Nakutona ekilabuzile."
"Ekilabuzile kiki?"

  "Aliyo omushaija alikwilagula.
Ngu yakwenda, baaba
  Tibya mu maalwa
  Anga tibya mu nanga.
Yakwenda emikono
  Yashuba yakwitanila entambukilo.
Kingula omubone."
Ahi, "Baana taha omu nju n' embuzi."

Kabyahingiile n' ente ya wenene n' embuzi,
Yatamu olwigi.

Ngenda nyegobela
Omukazi yatailemu olwigi.
Ngya nyem' omu lwigi.
Ngya nyem' omu lwigi.

177.1-181: Compound stanza in aaab, 2 + 2 + 2 + 2; couplets cohere by enjambment (177.1-178) and by parallelism (178.1-178.2, 179-179.1); the final couplet differs by its semantic non-coherence: the wife's response (181) markedly ignores the children's message.

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 201-212.2:
Importuned yet again, Kaiyula raises the objection of her absent husband and the magical harm her affair could cause him.

NOTES

188-200.1 The first eleven lines of seductive compliments substantially repeat those spoken by the woman's husband when he was courting her to elope (62.1.-63.1). The utterances of the husband and of the lover differ in the lines that precede or follow each passage. The husband's speech expresses his will to possess the object of his desire completely (as by eating: 64), exclusively (even against the laws of the state: 64.3) and publically (through self-adornment: 64.1 and self-praise: 65-65.2). It articulates a clan-related ethics of alliance - of a woman thoroughly wedded to the self of a man publicly and privately. The lover's speech, on the contrary, appreciates the social and aesthetic virtues of the young woman - the way she looks (139-141.1), the way she moves (160), and the demeanor she projects (145). The lover's seductive speech also articulates a discourse of rapture (194-200.1), represented as a state like that produced by alcohol, marijuana, or madness. His persona is both lost in her beauty and conscious of its significance. He knows the themes of passionate love.

POETIC STANZAS

189-191: Stanza in aab(b); the parallelism of the first two lines (189, 190) is finalized in the third (190.1) by a double verb formation and then re-finalized by another double verb with a shift in inflection (see 144-146).

194-200.1: Two stanzas with mirror structure (194-197, 198-200.1): accusation (194, 198) elaboration of charge (195-196.1, 199), denial (196, 200), plea (197, 200.1).

202-210: Verse passage in aab composed of two stanzas (202-205 and 206-209) finalized by a single line (210); the first stanza is formed as aabb by parallelism, by semantic contrasts between kin and non-kin (children and brides versus warriors and the semi-rich) and by the presence of the term of address maawe, "my mother"; the second stanza is structured as abab by virtue of a repeated formula, banana name/ "sister of [color modifier] people"; the single line (210) finalizes the passage by expressing the desire that motivates the praise.

Little mother, I said,
Heart of our people,
Creator of the body

Where dwells the soothing-warmth of a bushbuck pelt
The bubbling-heat of a civet cat.

Mosquitoes prick me like thorns,
Breasts pierce me like iron points.

Falls on its back
A leather skirt works.

Roar to me you are Kito,
Alight in my heart, you are Kaihyula.

I love you big girl.
I desire your arms
And to add to that I love the way you walk.
Oblige me, open up."

"You sir!
You sir! You!

You're drunk!
You drank at Kitala today
And cleared your mouth with ganja in Buzinja."
"Mother, I am not drunk.
Open up and see what's intoxicated me."

"You're a madman.
They should make fetters of mulinzi wood for you."
"Mother, I am not mad.
Open up and see what's brought on my madness."

"This house cannot be opened.
My husband's gone to trade."

"My mother, Hunger of children
My mother, Shyness of brides
Heart-pounding of warriors,
Keeping-up-appearances like the Moderately-well-to-do.
Skin of the enkonjwa plant
Sister of the light-skinned body.
Skin of the entundu plant, child
Sister of the dark-complexioned.
My mother, oblige me, open up."

Nti, "Mawe kaana
Mwoyo gw' abaitu,
Ishewanga bugingo

Butula bugububgu bw' akajobe
Mokomoko y' akamondo

Nsili zinkoza nk' amahwa,
Mabele gankonza nk' omuhunda.

Lugwa bugazi
Nkanda ikolela

Ompindile oli kito,
Ohanantuk' omwoyo oli Kaihyula.

Nakwenda kisiki.
Nakwenda emikono.
Nashuba nakwitanila intambukilo.
Okunde onkingulile."

"Iwe mushaija
Iwe mushaija iwe!

Watamiila!
Waganywa Kitala kil' eki
Wateza enjaye Buzinja."
"Mawe tintamiile.
Kingula obone ekintamize."

"Oli mulalu Bakutemele ekiti ky' omulinzi."
"Mawe tindalukile Kingula obone ekindalwile."

"Mununju tekingulwaamu Mushaija wange yagya kutunda."

"Mawe Njala y' abaana
Mawe Nshoni z' abagole
Biteleelo by' abatende
Byemalamalo nk' omukombi
Kyai ky' enkonjwa
Munyaanya abela omubili.
Kyai kyentundu bojo
Munyaanya abalikwilagula.
Mawe kund' onkingulile."

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 213-232:
The knowing neighbor tells her how to deflect this kind of danger with herbs and ritual acts.

NOTES

217 The abstinence taboo circumscribes a woman's behavior with men other than her husband. As in the present case, if a man goes on a journey and his wife takes a lover, the husband becomes vulnerable. He may fall ill or die, or his enterprise may be unsuccessful. Or he may die from having intercourse with his wife on his return if she has not used the proper medicines. This prohibition also includes other kinds of behavior, like a wife's giving ensenene - highly valued, seasonally available, fried or parched grasshoppers - to another man when her husband is away; the ensenene she gives to her husband on his return will kill him. And it affects other family members: if a child has not cut teeth and a woman sleeps with a lover, the teeth will not grow properly or the child may get sick and die. Such supernatural sanctions to not encumber men.

224-225 Tongue-cutter, Call-and-they-come, and Bolt-for-the-door are names for herbs.

227 Water brought for washing signifies domesticity, family solidarity, and wife-like obedience (see, for example, Lukiza: 47, 101.3; Kachwenyanja: 394).

POETIC STANZAS

213-216.1: Compound stanza in aabb, 2 + 2 + 2 + 2, by repetition.

218-220.1: Stanza in abab by repetition.

221-225: Compound stanza in aab, 2 + 3 + 1; initial linegroups (a's: 221-222, 223-224.1) are formed by combinations of single verb initial lines (221, 223, 224) finalized by double verb initial lines (222, 224.1); the transition between these linegroups is marked by chaining (222-223); the figure is finalized by a line that has no verb (b: 225).

227-228.1: Stanza in abcb formed by parallel use of relative clauses and repetition of /nab/ "wash."

230-232: Stanza in aab formed by contrast between initial, 2nd person subjunctive verbs (a's:230, 231) and final, third person negative (b: 232).[ka discount]

"I cannot open.
I'm still a bride.
I married only recently
You see these beads in conversation with those on my ankles.
It is forbidden.
I've never lain with anyone.
It might result in something monstrous."

I said, "Let that go, mother. Let that go.
Let that go, blood brother. Let that go.
It's not forbidden, elder sister. It wouldn't harm a thing.
I said, "It's not forbidden, blood brother. It wouldn't harm a thing.

Let me tell you how to protect against the abstinence taboo.

When your husband's not at home,
He's set out to travel in trade,
When your husband's not at home,
He's set out to travel in trade,

Walk to the edge of the banana grove.
Step out behind your house.
Go out behind your house,
Find Tongue-cutter.
Go for Call-and-they-come,
And Bolt-for-the-door.

Provider, Provider.

Water left from
What you brought for him to wash today,
Keep it. Guard
What he washed with as he was setting out.

When he returns, my friend,
Care for him,
Wash his feet with it.
The abstinence taboo will stay away."

"Tinkukingula 'nye.
Ndi mugole.
Nshweilwe juba.
Nobona enkwanzi niigamba n' amagulu.

Nkizila
Tinkalalaga na muntu
Nakukola amahano!"

Nti, "Ebyo bileke mawe. Ebyo bileke.
Ebyo bileke munywanyi wange. Ebyo bileke.
Tibizila, mukulu wange, mawe. Tibiita kantu.
Nti, "Ebyo tibizila, munywanyi wange. Tibiita kantu.

Kankuholole, bojo, ebitamba amakile.

K'omushaija aba atalimu,
Atulukile nagya kutunda,
K'omushaija aba atalimu,
Atulukile nagya kutunda,

Ogend' engemu kibunu,
Otuluke ogy' enyumanju,
Ogye enyumanju,
Ohige Oluchwailimi,
Ogy' oteho Olwetakija,
Ekiimbo ky' olwigi.

Lugaba, Lugaba,

Amaizi g' amalala
Agowamunabisa nago mbwenu,
Oikale ogekomize
Agoyanaba natuluka okutunda.

K'alihulula, baaba,
Otambe,
Omunabise nago amagulu.
Amakile tigakigoba."

E-wo-o-o
"Before he left he raised a column in the house
But hasn't leaned his back against it yet.
He built a pillow there
But hasn't yet stepped over it."
"We'll not step over the pillow.
We'll go instead into the little room in front.
We'll not rest against his column,
We'll sit out in the open space."

"You man, you have confounded me!
You've found me in a bad way,
In a fortnight in anticipation,
In a disordered garden.
You have found me in the steps.
I'm in the steps."
I lowered my eyes to where my cattle raids begin.
My little leg's been cut.

"Let it go, my lady, my child, my blood brother.
Go stand in the doorway.
And only laugh so I can see your teeth.
If things develop in the future,
Let's make a fairskinned child.
Or uncover only just a little Child, so I can see your giggles"

"You man! You are a bad one.
You've made me say too much
You've wrongly touched my heart.

Let me go behind the house.
I'll go and ask my sister-in-law.
What she counsels me,
I'll quickly come and counsel you"

When I went and asked my sister-in-law
She said, "Get out of here!

What? Are wives not begged?
That's because you're begged by wind,
Going out to cultivate, with hoe shafts balanced on your heads.

E-wo-o-o
"Asigile ahigikile enyomyo
Takagyegamiile.
Ataileho omushago
Takagutambukile"
"Titutambuke mushago
Tulashuba omu kagendw'omu.
Enyomyo titugyegamile
Tulaikala omu ilugu busha."

"Iwe mushaija, wanshobeza!
Washanga ndi habi.
Omu nshumi z' amalaalila,
Ndi omu nkungulu itabile.
Wanshanga nyin' ebigele.
Nyin' ebigele."
Najuumika amaisho mbali ndashanisa
Natemw' akagulu.

"Ebyo bileke, nyaikazi, bojo,munwanyi wange.
Ogy' oyeme omu lwigi
Kyonka osheke mbone amaino gawe.
Kabilagya omu ikulu
Nkuzaaleho omwaana alikwela omubili.
Angili oshulule katikati
Bojo nkubone omusheko"

"Iwe mushaija! Oli mubi.
Wangambisa gangi
Wankola ag' omu mwoyo.

Kangye enyumanju.
Ngye mbaze kalamukazi.
K'alampanuulila,
Ndaija nkuhanuulile bwangu"

Kugya kukabaza kalamukazi
Ahi, "Chwekao na iwe!

Abakazi timushabwa?
Nikyo mushabilwa omuyaga!
Emihini y' emfuka mugyetwekile nimutuluka kugya kulima.

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 233-238.1:
Kaiyula raises a further objection about her husband, but the neighbor answers it.

Lines 239-247.1:
In a final attempt to dissuade him, Kaiyula indicates she is menstruating, prompting a response that confirms to her the trueness of his loving desire.

Lines 248-271:
Kaiyula then consults her in-laws, under whose protection and supervision she lives, about the potential affair. Her sister-in-law sees no problem in it and instructs the young woman in rituals to protect her husband's possessions -- his clan land, his trading goods, and the attractiveness of her body -- from possible harm.

NOTES

233.1-236 By raising a column in his father's house, a son defined a sleeping space for his new bride and himself. Later on, if he is not the youngest son (who inherits the paraent's house), he would build a house of his own.PAGE

239-242.1 In a bad way, a fortnight of anticipation, garden mounds in disorder, and the steps are all euphemisms for menstruation.

247.1 Smile refers to a recently shaved pubes; see note to 15.

255-258.1 Get out of here! The response of the sister-in-law (with whom a bride traditionally enjoys an intimate relationship) is to berate the young woman for even thinking she might not have an affair with so worthy a lover, a neighbor whom the sister-in-law evidently knows. Wives, are you not begged? she asks rhetorically, using a euphemism for sexual intercourse. Wind represents the insubstantial, worthless lovers wives have liaisons with when they go out to the fields between villages to cultivate. They are as wind, compared with the knowing neighbor.

POETIC STANZAS

233.1-336: Stanza in abab, formed by repetition of the formula, verb + direct object/ negative verb.

237-238.1: Stanza in abab formed by repetition of the formula, negative subjunctive verb + direct object/ future verb + prepositional phrase; note that word order is reversed in 238.

239-242.1: Compound stanza in aab, 2 + 2 + 2, formed by contrast between couplets that cohere by parallel syntax (a's: 239-240 (verbal inflection) and 241-241.1 (prepositional phrase)) and one that coheres by lexical repetition (b: 242-242.1, "I have 'the steps'"); the latter also contrasts to the former couplets semantically in being considered a more direct naming of menstruation.

243-244: Stanza in aab by contrast between similarly inflected initial narrative verbs (243, 243.1) and a quoted utterance that begins with a pronoun.

245-247.1: Compound stanza in aba, 2 + 2 + 2, by contrast between couplets composed according to the formula, ...2nd person subjunctive + preposition/...first person subjunctive + direct object (a's: 245-245.2, 247-247.1) and a single couplet (b: 246-246.1) with a similar, but variant syntax.

248-249.1: Stanza in aab formed by repeated verbal inflection.

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 272-280.1:
She does as she was told.

Lines 281-290:
She then consults her husband's nephew, who in figurative language differentiates institutional and non-institutional forms of love and declares that latter harmless if handled correctly; Kaiyula agrees.

NOTES

260-271 The sister-in-law's charm to protect against the abstinence taboo begins with images of land and crops to be protected: earth, stone, and winnowing-basket. Then she advises about care of the bride's body (268-271). A storage-pole (fixed near the cooking fire and used to store and display vessels) and milk pots are symbols associated with the bride's sexuality. Both body and land are central to reproduction of a clan.

282-290 The figurative advice of the bride's nephew (her husband's brother's son) draws a distinction between pain and killing. The former is associated with love and desire (the soul serpent: 284-285), the latter with reproduction and order (body: 283 and spear: 286-287). Making a bed to have an affair (288) does not kill: individual passion does not have lasting significance (only clan duty does). PAGE

POETIC STANZAS

259-264: Compound stanza in aab, 2 + 2 + 2, formed by contrast between two couplets that cohere by virtue of a linear relationship (259-260, 261-262) and a single couplet (263-264) that coheres solely by strict parallelism and temporal simultaneity.

259-287: Two verses in aab (259-271, 272-287) comprised of six compound stanzas described immediately above, formed by contrast between compound stanzas that are substantially repeated (a's: 259-264, 265-267.1 repeated in 272-277, 278-280.1, respectively) and compound stanzas that are not repeated (b's: 268-271, 282-287).

265-267.1: Compound stanza in aab, 2 + 2 + 2, formed by contrast between two couplets that cohere by virtue of shared syntactic features (prepositional phrases - 265-265.1, double verb formation - 265.2-266) and a single couplet that coheres by strict parallelism (267-267.1).

268-271: Compound stanza in aab, 2 + 2 + 2, formed by two couplets that cohere by virtue of shared syntactic features (direct object, hairstyle, in final position - 268-268.1, and similarly inflected verbs in initial position - 269-269.1) contrasted with a single couplet that coheres more tightly by shared double verb formation and closely related direct objects in final position - milk vessels and the pole they hang from; the last couplet is also distinctive in being a possible metaphor for sexual matters.

272-277: Compound stanza in aab, 2 + 2 + 2, a substantial repetition of lines 259-264; contrast between finalizing couplet and the initial couplets remains essentially the same and a double verb has been added so that the pattern now marks both initial couplets (272, 274).

278-280.1: Compound stanza in aab, 2 + 2 + 2, a substantial repetition of lines 265-267.1; contrast between the finalizing couplet and the initial two couplets remains substantially the same; the contrast has been strengthened by removing the verb from the first line (278 compared to 265) making the initial couplet now solely prepositional phrases.

282-287: Compound stanza in aab, 2 + 2 + 2, formed by contrast between two couplets that cohere by virtue of parallelism (lexical - "...kills not./...what kills is..." -283-284, and semantic - "What pricks.../It pains..." - 284-285) and a single finalizing couplet (286-287) that coheres by an enjambment marked by a direct object preceeding its verb and by a double verb formation.

When the husband's not at home,
Walk to the edge of the banana grove.
Go dig up a bit of earth.
Then wrap nine packets of it.
On your head place a stone.
On your shoulders place a winnowing basket.

Walk into your husband's houseplot,
  In the center of the forecourt.
  Go lie down on your back.
And also make this supplication:
Say: 'My husband's fortune be brought,
  But my lover's fortune be not brought.'

Do your hair in pigtails.
  When he returns you'll cover him in combed-out tresses.
Brush your teeth white
  Then speak and he'll see the very things to laugh with.
Go and pretty up the storage pole.
To add to this, wash out the milk pots."

I came running.
I was brought to the edge of the banana grove.
I went and dug a bit of earth.
I wrapped nine packets of it.
On my head I placed a stone.
On my shoulders I placed a winnowing basket.

In my husband's houseplot
  In the center of the forecourt
  I obliged and lay down on my back.
To add to this I said this supplication:
"My husband's fortune be brought,
  My lover's fortune be not brought."

I called my nephew.

"Ho! Child, Pain is not what kills."

K'omushaija aba atalimu,
Ogend' engemu kibunu.
Ogye oshokole akataka.
Okakome emishenga mwenda.
Aha mutwe otaho eibale.
Aha ibega otaho olutalo.

Oija omwa balo
  Omu kibuga omugati.
  Ogy' ogw' egangali.
Oshuba otongelela
Oti, 'Ebya ibanye bitundwe
  Kyonka ebya mugendawa bitakatundwa.'

Otele ekabe.
  Yaizile olamubundikya omuchuchu.

Osinga amaino gela
  Ogamba nobona eky' okushekya.
Ogye otone omugamba.
Oshube oyengelele ebyanzi."

Nkaija ninyiluka .
Naletwa engemu kibunu.
Nagya nashokola akataka.
Nakoma emishenga mwenda.
Aha mutwe nataho eibale.
Aha ibega nataho olutalo.

Omwa ibanye
  Omu kibuga omugati
  Nakunda naagwa egangali.
Nashuba natongelela,
Nti, "Ebya ibanye bitundwe,
  Ebya mugendawa bitakatundwa."

Nayeta omwaana wange.

"Bojo, Bushasi teita"

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 291-317:
Kaiyula remarks to the neighbor about the presence of her mother-in-law, but to him she poses no problem. His flattering words bend her will to his purpose.

NOTES

301-303 The doorway arch of bundled bamboo is a beautiful architectural feature of an old-style Haya house (msonge). The backs of many older women in Hayaland have become permanently bent, people say, from the heavy agricultural digging they do with a short handled hoe.

304 The address, Child, reverses the ages of the speaker and addressee in a gesture of familiarity (see 169).

306 They did not lie to you when they said you'd grow up well.

312 Coffee berries, cooked with spices and preserved, are eaten as a snack and mild stimulant.

313 Ngalama is the name of a village. It is also a pun on oku-galama "to lie down."

POETIC STANZAS

288-290: Stanza in aabb in which couplets cohere internally by enjambment and repetition, respectively, and relate to each other as utterance and response.

295-296.1: Stanza in aabb in which couplets cohere internally by repetition (/zala/ "bear" or "mother" - 295-295.1 and /lemba/ "beguile" 296-296.1) and relate to each other as conversational turns.

297-300: Compound stanza in aab, 2 + 2 + 1, formed by couplets that cohere internally by repetition (a's: "elder" - 297-298; "child" - 299-299.1) contrasted with a single line that repeats elements from both couplets (b: 300).

301-306.2: Compound stanza in abab, 2 + 1 + 2 + 3, formed by contrast between linegroups that specify conditions (a's: 301-302, 304-305) and those that state result (b's: 303, 306-306.2); syntactic coherence is strongest in the first couplet, which combines infinitive and distant past in each line, and in the contrast between halves - the first ab being couched in the distant past, the second in the past perfect, except for the final line (306.2) that combines the tenses.

309-312: Stanza in aabb, whose couplets cohere by enjambment and syntactic chaining of direct objects, respectively. [discount]

He said, "My mother, what kills is the body itself.
What pricks is the soul serpent,
It pains the heart.
But the spear you use to kill, dear one,
You dwell always dependent on it.
'Plump a pillow for me' kills nothing, child."
I agreed.
I agreed.

When I'd looked after all these household matters,
I returned to the man in the doorway.
"I see you truly love me," I said,
But the house I live in is not my own.

Inside is my mother-in-law, the one who bore my husband."
"I've beguiled you, young one.
Now I'll beguile the elder.

Mother! My elder!
Elder! Elder!"
"You, child, why shout to me, from my own child's doorway?"
"My mother, what I shout to you about . . .

Growing up, you arrived here.
Travelling further, you became bowed and bent.
You came to be like the bundled bamboo arches of a doorway.
Child, your face with its high-swept forehead–
Whoever met you in your youth,
Child, did not lie to you when they said,
'Perhaps, just maybe, perhaps,
You'll take shape beautifully.'"

"Where is that young man from?
He comes with such sweet words."

"Mother, my elder,
In our family's cattle corral,
There is a log of mujumbo wood . . .
You elders love its quick fire
And coffee berries that cut the taste of morning.

Let me go to Ngalama.
Ngalalama of Kabi

313-317: Stanza in aabbb whose couplet and triplet cohere by chaining and whose transition between linegroups is marked by a double verb formation.

Ahi, "Maawe, ekiita ni bugingo.
Akakoza enjoka lugondo,
Kakushasa omu mwoyo.
Eichumu ly' olaisa baaba,
Oikala olyetegeile.
'Ntindila omushago ogaluke,' bojo, tigwita."
Nakunda.
Nakunda.

Olwo nasigile ebyo byona omu nju nabyekomize,
Ngya ngambila omushaija ayabaile ali omu lwigi.
"Wanyendakwo,
Enju eyondimu tiyange.

Alimu mazaala. Niwe azaala ibanye."

"Nalemba iwe omuto.
Kambanze kulemba omukaile.

Mawe! Mukaile!
Mukaile! Mukaile!"
"Onkungiileki iwe mwaana aha lwigi lw' omwaana wange?"
"Mawe ekyo nkukungiile...

Kukula okagoba aha.
Kugya okabondabonda.
Okashana enti z' emilyango.

Bojo, buso bweleleile.
Ayakushangile omu buto
Bojo, tibakubehiyeleile
Shana lundi shana
Okaba omezile."

"Omwaana yaluga nkahai?
Ogu ayaija n' obugambo obulikunula!"

"Mawe, mukaile,
Omwange aha luhongole
Aliho olukwi lw' omujumbo -
Bakaile mwenda omulilo
Kimwani ochwise eiko.

Oleke ngye Ngalama.
Ngalalama ya Kabi

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 319-327.1:
The mother-in-law agrees to let the man inside the house.

Lines 328-336:
Kaiyula gathers herbs useful for love.

NOTES

316 The intense interchange in bickering indicates the character's goal. The word can also have a negative connotation, as in Kajango: 4.

321-324.1 The image of fighting bulls pictures an active, robust female sexuality. The older woman remembers her past.

331-336 Five of the first six lines name herbs that also appear in the bard's Kajango: 175-175.6. The remaining six lines name herbs and describe effects to create a poetic figure on the experience of rapture.

POETIC STANZAS

319-325.2: A triplet (319.1-320) and a couplet (321-322) are repeated (325-325.2 and 324-324.1, respectively) to form an annular pattern (alternately, a compounded aba structure); the triplet coheres by semantic relationships between imperative (319) and justification (319.2-320); the couplet coheres by syntactic formula (cattle descriptor + 2nd person verb - 321-322); and the couplet that stands at the center of the figure (323-323.1) coheres by enjambment.[discount]

328-330: Stanza in aabb whose couplets cohere internally by repeated double verb formation and lexical repetition, respectively.

I would go and buy the bickering."
"The bickering–of what?"
"Of that which quickly overturned the rule of kings."

Stop for tape
Wewe

"My child, my child, Kaihyula,open for the man.

Mosquitoes torment him in the doorway.
And I was just the same:

Spotted-one grow well.
Roan-bull you've battled.
At Lugelebe you did battle with Achieves-the-impossible,
And they're still picking up thepieces.
Spotted-one grow well.
Roan-bull you've battled."

She said,"Open for the man.
Mosquitoes torment him in the doorway.
And I was just the same."

I go and open it.
The man comes in and stretches out his legs near the hearth.
He takes some straw and sets it burning to warm himself and dry the dew.

And I step out on the gardenpath.
I go and make my preparations.
I prepare myself, child.
I prepare myself.

I find Sweetness-of-lushankala,
(Love) Opens-like-a-flower,
Causes-happy-laughter,
Heart's-surprise,
Soul-stealer,
I do myself for him with Stray's-Return.
May-nettle-sting-all-over.
Laughter-of-the-earth: His-laughter-be-free-with-me
Enkili herb, Nyaililimbi and tobacco.
May he drift along like smoke.
May I be clothed in desire, like the grass that covers a river inlet.

Ngye ngule ewengawenge."
"Ewengwenge n' eyai?"
"Eyayakile abakama engoma bwangu."

Stop for tape
Wewe

"Mwaana wange, mwaana wange, Kaihyula, kingulila omushaija.
Emibwi yamwitila omu lwigi.
Nanye nikwo nabaile ndi:

Lubamba kula.
Lugaju okaba olwaine.
Walwanila Lugelebe Luchwa-ibano
Lwona bakyalondalonda.
Lubamba kula.
Lugaju okaba olwaine."

Ahi, "Kingulila omushaija.
Emibwi yamwitila ahalwigi.
Na 'nye nikwo nabaile ndi.

Ngenda ndukingula.
Omushaija amagulu aganyimika aha mwanya.

Abanza kukwata obunyaasi kwebabuula olume

Nanye ntuluka n' ogw' ekibanga
Ngya nkola ogw' okwekobola.
Nyekobola, bojo.
Nyekobola.

Ngobela bunuzi bwa lushakala
Akashanshula
Akashekela uku
Ampuukukile omwoyo
Olwiiba mutima,
Ngya mwekolela Ihabula.
Engenyi mulumaalume.
Nsheko y' ensi anshekele busha
Ekilili nyaililimbi ekitaaba
Agende ataha bilaju.
Mwoye muno kinyaasi kishweka enshongo y' omwiga.

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 337-350:
The lovers embrace.

Lines 351-386:
Their elaborate pillow talk is playful argument, praise, encouragement, and ecstatic exclamation.

NOTES

339 Off-they-race is a small earthenware vessel used in feminine preparations for lovemaking. Its name celebrates its ability to heat up quickly (see Kajango: 180-180.1).

340.1 The wonders that begin here have been ritually and socially prepared so as to avoid unlucky consequences. They are still called amahano, a term that connotes their danger (see note to 45-47).

354-356 The bride uses the same rhetorical form that her husband used earlier with slight, but significant, variation. Maawe, "Mother" (354), a term of address, seems to be a mistake, for these lines are spoken by the bride to her lover.

POETIC STANZAS

337-339.1: Stanza in aabb whose couplets cohere internally by repeated initial verbal forms (adverbial prefix - 337-338; distant past - 339-339.1)

340-341.1: Stanza in aaab formed by contrast between lines that begin with verbs similarly inflected and a finalizing line of praise that begins with an aside.

342-344: Stanza in aab(b) formed by lines that begin with double verbs in 1st person singular (342, 342.1) contrasted with a line that is wholly comprised of a 1st person plural verb (343); the figure is then refinalized with a contrasting line that wholly lacks a verb (344) and that supplies a detail confirming the psychological intimacy of the embrace - a right handed (rather than a left handed) caress.

345-350: Compound stanza in aab(b), 2 + 2 + 1 (+ 1), formed by couplets composed according to a formula, 1st person singular narration/praise or apposition (a's: 345-346, order reversed in 347-348) finalized by a single line in 3rd person singular narration (b: 349); the figure is then refinalized by a single line in the 3rd person plural that speaks of more physically intimate contact below.

When I returned,
When I stood beside the hearth,
I went to search for off-they-race
  I made my preparations.

He leaped over the bed pillow.
  He began to work strange wonders.
He sat watching me, the man,
  As you see the moon, lustrous in the sky.

I prepared. I finished preparing.
  I went and followed after him.
We embraced,
Right hand on belly.

I touched the gut of soft steps
Where love steps gently to the heart.
Then love's bargain-striker:
I placed my hand above his hip.
And he touched me with his little fist.
Below they welcome one another.

"Not long ago you abused me.
You abused me with beer drinkers.
You abused me with ganja smokers."
"I didn't abuse you so very much.
For the abuse I abused you with
My penalty is–I speak politely, lying with you."

Wewe

Legs were intertwined.
Navels danced.

When I looked into her face, in truth,
When I looked into her face,
I felt the whole of my Feud-Seeker
Reach its destination.

351-356: Compound stanza in abab, 1 + 2 + 1 + 2, formed by alternation of single lines (a's: 351, 354) that introduce couplets (b's: 352-353, 355-356) by chaining the word /jum/ "verbal(ly) abuse"; couplets cohere, respectively, by repetition and parallelism and by enjambment (cause/effect or crime/punishment).

Kanagile kulugayo,
Kanayemelela aha mwanya,
Nkagya kuhiiga basilibutuka
  Nkakola okwekobola.

Yaguluka omushago gw' ekitabo
  Yabanza kwekola amahano.
Yaikala andebile omushaija
  Okw'obona nyandolelana okwezi aha igulu.

Nayekobola namala.
  Nagenda nagya namuhondela.
Twafumbatana,
Ogwabulyo omu nda.

Nakola omu mala ga bunyoga
Mbali engonzi inyoga omwoyo.
Ekichwa-iguzi ky' engonzi
Namuta akahi aha kiige.
Na wenene yantoneka akatome.
Aha ifo byanyegejanyia.

"Ijweli okanjuma.
Wanjumisa ab' amaalwa.
Wanjumisa ab' ebitooke."
"Mawe, tinakujumile bwoli.
Kijumi 'kyonakujuma
Mfumola ninkalaale naiwe."

Wewe

Gali eishobe.
Emikundi yataiga.

Kanamulalamiile mazima,
Kanamulalamiile,
Mwiga-nzigu wena
Mpulila yagobile.

360-363: Stanza in aabb formed by couplets that cohere by repetition and by enjambment, respectively; the figure coheres as a whole by enjambment.

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 387-395:
Kaiyula's verbal expression, which had never before been so free, sparks anger in the mother-in-law. She now worries about the potential magical effect of the adultery and threatens the young woman.

Lines 396-406.1:
Kaiyula answers in a way that demonstrates a rhetorical power commensurate with that of the seductive neighbor.

NOTES

379 snake - see note to Rukiza: 171.2.

380 Sweet mash is similar to the metaphor another bard uses (see The Place You Come From: 72).

395 Dramatic punishments for unnatural deeds (amahano) seem to be part of a discourse of deterrence. See, for example, the ending to the story, "Child of the Valley" in See so... and the remembered punishment for violating clan exogamy in Cory and Hartnoll: 92.

POETIC STANZAS

367.1-74.1: Verse in aab composed of 3 stanzas in aab of three lines each (367.1-369, 370-372, 373-374.1): the contrasts between a's and b's are semantic throughout (man/house as subject, change in speaker, and act of naming/justification); initial couplets cohere by enjambment in the first two stanzas but by marked parallelism in the third, a contrast the creates the aab form of the verse as a whole.

375-376.1: Stanza in abab formed by repetition and parallelism.

379-385: Stanza in aaaaaab formed by repetition and parallelism; the final line (385) is shortened to create the contrast.

I said, "My mother
She said, "My father,
Iyo-o-o
My blood brother,
    What is your name, my . . . "
She said, "You man lying with me
In this house that's not my own?"
"My name . . .
Announces cattle and the reign."
"That 'Announced' you should let go.
I'll call you Heart-tumbler.
I'll name you Not-of-your-house.
    The tumbling you stir in my navel amazes.

Mold my little belly
    Like a potter kneading clay.
Ring my little belly
    Like a blacksmith shaping iron.

The manchild loves me.
He touched me below the navel–
Where it makes the snake that dwells there grow,
Where sweet banana beer mash squeezes itself,
Where froth foams up,
Where waves churn,
Where soul-serpent was born,
Where ankle bells tingle inside,
And iron roared with many voices.
You . . . Announced!"

I hear the elder woman speak:
"What you said now so freely, child,
Daughter-in-law of mine . . .
Your husband, my son, who married you . ..
It's a shame, until this very day
    You've never said so freely."

Dear one,

"If my son falls there,
    Out where he has gone for trade,
I'll be sure that it's you who brought him the monstrous wonder
And that your unborn child will be cut from you in the grave."

"My mother, you spoke so badly to me.
I still have my husband!

Nti, "Mawe,
Ogu ahi, "Tata."
Iyo-o-o
Munywanyi wange,
    Eibala oly' owa, bakama..."
Ati, "Iwe mushaija alaala nanye
Enju egi etali yange?"
"Inye elyange...
Lilanga ente n' engoma."
"Elya 'Lulangwa' olilekele.
Nakweta Ibwaguza-miganya.
Nkuluke Elitali lya mwanyu.
    Wambwaguza omukundi nashobelwa.

Kwatila kimo omu ndanke
    Nk' omukwasi w' eibumba.
Huulila kimo omu ndanke
    Nk' omuhuzi w' ekyoma.

Lwaana lwangonza.
Lwankola aha mukundi eifo,
Mbali kakuza enjoka etula,
Mbali omulamba gwejunga,
Mbali akafulo katotoba,
Mbali amayengo gechunda,
Mbali lugondo yazaalile,
Mbali entogolo ejug' omu nda,
Obwoma bukayogeela.
Iwe Lulangwa!"

Mpulila omukaile yagamba:
"Ebyo wayatula mbwenu bojo
Mukamwaana wange...
Iba, mwaana wange, akushweile...
Kizila, kilo ekya mbwenu
    Manti tokabyatulaga."

Baaba

"Omwaanawa kaligwayo
    Mbali yatuluka kugya kutunda,
Ndikyekomya wagenda omukoleile amahano.

Kyonka enda 'y'oinayo baligibaagila omu nyanga."

"Mawe wangamba kubi.
Nyina ibanye iwe!

PLOT OUTLINE

Lines 407-413:
In a coda, the bard introduces two characters from other speech genres to comment on the ballad narrative\: a folktale bird that sees but says it will not tell, and a Biblical or Koranic angel that failed to maintain the sanctity of marriage.

NOTES

400-404 Ashes for friction and a slap to disguise the pain are aspects of one method used to depilate a vulva (see note to 12-15).

407-410 Because of their ease of movement, birds witness and mediate secret acts in narratives. This element seems purposely to leave the tale slightly incomplete: what if the news should reach the husband when he returns?

411-413 This last aside seems to convey the same kind of pessimism the bard leaves us with in Kajango.

POETIC STANZAS

400-406: Compound stanza in aab, 3 + 2 + 4, formed by linegroups that cohere syntactically (subjunctive + linking - 400-402; subjunctive verbs initial - 403-404) contrasted with a line group that is distinctive semantically as praise.

When the sun will dawn
And I've embraced him,

We'll take some ashes,
Ashes in banana bark,
Into the upper section of the farm.
You go, take it out, dust it off,
Slap it with your palm,
And say, 'Spotted-one grow well
But Roan-bull you've battled
At Lugelebe you did battle with Achieves-the-impossible,
And they're still picking up pieces.'

What kind of bird is it
That stands before my eyes"

"I see you
But will not speak it openly, my child."

Change in Melody

See: when loves are in accord,
But an angel does not guard them both,
He sees them split apart.

Kabulakya
Olwo namufumbasile,

Tutwaale eijwi,
Eijwi aha kyai,
Aha kibanga kya lugulu.
Ogye ogiiye ogikuubule,
Ogitele oluhi,
Oti: 'Lubamba kula
Kyonka Lugaju okaba olwaine
Okalwanila Lugelebe Bichwa-ibano
Bakyalonda.

Kanyonyi nyabaki
Akanyem' omu maisho gange?"

"Nkubone
Tindikyatula bojo"

Change in Melody

Delo wewe olw'engonzi zipatana
Na malaika aba atakibalinda bona
Aleeba kazigutuka.